

This Cold Morning

by Sara Backer

my brain forgot to think in words.
It was wonderful.

The sky, one huge cloud, released the snow, rolling in silence

the way trees die, slowly, over patient generations.

Suddenly, a burst of red feathers, a herald with a bright beak.

I have crossed the border into my last lap of life.

I will no longer speak.